

Dear Mr. Cross:

I wanted to extend my sincerest gratitude to you for taking my father's case well beyond what anyone could have expected of you. I understand that your investigation resulted in quite the adventure. You and your companions went to great risk, and I cannot thank all of you enough. I believe my father's spirit rests easy now thanks to your efforts.

Enclosed is a cheque for five hundred pounds, which I understand was the amount agreed upon. I wish I could spare more, but my father had spent quite a bit of his savings trying to get a second expedition approved. The rest of his assets, as per his instructions, have been willed to his beloved Oxford.

If you are in need of anything I can provide, don't hesitate to write, and if you or your friends find yourself in Reykjavik, my home will be open to you.

Most sincerely,
Freydis Emundsdóttir
